

At one point I thought I was never going to get this site back to normal again. In a moment of madness, I had set everything to private but, as time passed, I realised how hasty I'd been and that people weren't actually reading this with bad intent. I had a period of paranoia when I thought I was revealing too much of my personal business and that I was being foolish.

From the time that I set everything private, and up until today, a login component of the site had stopped working and nobody could login, including me. Obviously I've fixed it and I'm glad that I have. I hadn't realised what this little spec in cyberspace means to me. I have thoroughly missed it.

Long may it last.